Preparing for Inflation: Practical Budgeting and Investment Strategies for a Higher-Cost World

Immediate Budget Adjustments to Offset Inflation

Review Fixed Expenses

Reviewing insurance policies and increasing deductibles—if your emergency fund can absorb the additional risk—may lower premiums and free up monthly cash flow. Mortgage costs are another key area to review. While many homeowners are locked into existing rates, the prospect of declining interest rates may make refinancing attractive for some, potentially reducing monthly payments. Energy and utilities also warrant attention. Switching providers, renegotiating contracts, or locking in favorable rates may yield savings. Promotional cell phone plans, bundled services, or gas card incentives can also provide immediate relief.

Reevaluate “Semi-Fixed” Expenses

Some expenses that appear fixed—such as food and gasoline—often include discretionary elements. Food, in particular, presents opportunities for cost savings without sacrificing quality. Using coupons, purchasing generic brands, adjusting meal planning, reducing meat consumption, or limiting alcohol purchases can meaningfully improve monthly cash flow. It is important, however, not to reduce food costs at the expense of long-term health. Payroll deductions such as HSAs, FSAs, supplemental insurance, and charitable contributions should also be reviewed periodically. Because these are withheld automatically, they are often overlooked.

Trim Discretionary Spending

Entertainment, dining out, streaming services, travel, non-essential clothing, and hobbies often offer the most flexibility. While these reductions can be uncomfortable, honest evaluation of non-essential spending can significantly reduce financial pressure during inflationary periods.

Investment Strategies to Combat Inflation

Emphasize Long-Term Growth Assets

Historically, stocks have been the most effective asset class for preserving and increasing purchasing power. Over the past 30 years, stocks have averaged annual returns of approximately 10.15%, compared to 4.41% for bonds and 2.29% for cash. In real terms, cash has lost purchasing power, bonds have largely preserved it, and stocks have meaningfully increased it.

For short-term goals—particularly those under one year—reducing risk remains prudent. However, even conservative assets should be optimized by seeking higher-yielding money market funds, Treasury securities, efficient bond funds, structured notes, or preferred stocks. Maximizing yields on cash reserves and emergency funds can meaningfully offset inflation's impact without taking undue risk.

Incorporating Real Estate as an Inflation Hedge

Private real estate investments—on both the ownership and credit side—can provide diversification and inflation protection without the operational burden of property management. These options are often accessible through vetted investment vehicles with professional oversight. For those interested in direct ownership without traditional rental challenges, alternatives include raw land, farmland, or vacation properties. These investments may offer personal enjoyment alongside long-term appreciation. A vacation property, for example, may generate rental income, provide personal use, and ultimately become a retirement residence. Many real estate investments also offer tax advantages, further enhancing their appeal as an inflation hedge.

COMMUNITY SPOTLIGHT

6502 Harrison Road
Fredericksburg, OH 44627

In 2003, Triple H Plumbing was born out of both opportunity and a giant leap of faith. Lamar Hochstetler and Travis Hostetler had spent years in the plumbing industry, quietly learning the ropes and imagining what it might look like to do things their own way. Over the course of several months, they laid the groundwork to best prepare for their new adventure. Eventually they took the courageous step to leave their previous jobs—departing on good terms but full of ambition—to start something new. “We saw opportunities to do things our own way and knew how we wanted to run things,” Lamar remembers, “so we took a leap of faith and went out on our own. It was a risk, but one we knew we needed to take.”

Lamar and Travis had their work cut out for them. The early days were anything but easy. Starting from nothing meant a relentless push to get the business off the ground. Travis recalls, “The first few years required a lot of inventory purchases and hard work but that’s what it took to see it through.” There were moments when the future seemed uncertain, when they wondered if their risk would pay off.

Lamar never doubted the choice they made. “We were overwhelmed by the responsibility, but never questioned the business,” he says, echoing a sentiment familiar to anyone who’s ever chased a dream with everything they have. Travis remembers: “We had a small crew, and we put in long days. Sometimes I questioned if we were going to make it.”

The 2008 recession brought a storm that threatened to wash away even the most determined of entrepreneurs. Those years tested Triple H Plumbing in ways they never expected. “In 2008 and 2009 business was tough. We took on work we didn’t normally do, but we did what we needed to do to keep the lights on and food on our table. We leaned on crucial partnerships to keep work incoming.” Travis states. They adapted, expanded their scope, and did what it took to weather the economic downturn.

Slowly, their resilience paid off. The business grew, diversifying its offerings and expanding from a single truck to a fleet of six. With every milestone, Travis and Lamar felt the satisfaction of overcoming odds and forging ahead. In 2013, after outgrowing their first building, they moved into their new space—a move that was long overdue and symbolic of the company’s evolution.

But perhaps the most meaningful transformation came as their families began to join the journey. Now, two of Lamar’s sons and one of Travis’s sons have become part of the business. Lamar reflects on this transition with deep gratitude: “God has blessed our families through this business. It’s exciting that my kids want to be a part of what we worked so hard to build.” Travis, too, feels the bittersweet joy of watching his children grow within the company. “Having my kids come along is bittersweet. I love having them around, but it’s hard to see them grow up. I’m glad they’re coming up this way.”

Through all the changes, Triple H Plumbing maintains its commitment to community and service. The team takes pride in handling walk-ins and providing a wide range of plumbing supplies. With a dedicated service call team, Triple H Plumbing handles everything from leaking sinks to radiant heating to new construction. They even offer water testing and conditioning.

The Triple H Fleet

For Lamar, the real reward is seeing the company values reflected in their employees. “The most rewarding thing: having engaging employees that care about their job, and care about the customer and the work they do. We get positive comment cards back all the time and seeing our employees care for our community with the same commitment and passion that we started this company with is the ultimate reward.”

Looking back, Travis and Lamar are grateful for the journey—the challenges, the uncertainty, the victories, and the moments that tested their resolve and strengthened their bond. Triple H Plumbing isn’t just a business; it’s a legacy built on faith, family, and perseverance. As Lamar and Travis continue to nurture their company and their families, they hold onto hope for the future, grateful for the community that has supported them and the blessings that have come from taking a leap of faith all those years ago.
